MacDonald Loses Cowichan Control

Oswood G. MacDonald, founder and president of Cowichan Copper Co., today lost control of the company he has run for 15 years.

MacDonald and the management nominees for the board were defeated by a slate headed by former director Edward C. Dobell of West Vancouver. The vote was 1,642,313 shares for Dobell and 708,995 for MacDonald.

It was Dobell who on Aug. 23 petitioned the B.C. Supreme Court to order Cowichan to hold its annual meeting. The court ordered that the meeting be held today.

About 40 people were at the meeting at the Hotel Vancouver to hear a renewal of the control battle between MacDonald and Dobell. At the last annual meeting MacDonald and his slate out-voted the Dobell slate.

Before the vote, MacDonald said the company's copper mine at Jordan River on Vancououver Island had lacked working capital from the start. He said the company had 2,300 tons of concentrate ready for shipment to Spain.

Dobell, asked to say what were his plans, said that as no financial statements had been presented he did not know what was required.

But he said "if new funds are needed they will be available."

The meeting was generally quiet but there were shouts of "Sit Down" when MacDonald attempted to interrupt a speech by former managing director Donald Pringle.
