Mine Looking to Future After Ravages of Flood

By JIM HUME
Times Business Editor

JORDAN RIVER—Al Stober used to be a hard-rock miner.

Today he makes his living "on top" serving amber-colored liquid to thirsty miners and loggers who make their home base this small west coast community.

Like most miners or prospectors, Al is the eternal optimist. He is quite convinced that within five years at least five mines will be operating in the general Jordan River area.

Hume

He could be right.

This summer at least two diamond drilling crews will be wandering through the wild west coast bush to prove-up known ore deposits.

The entire area has been staked for years with G. J. MacDonald of Cowichan Copper holding many of the claims in his hip pocket.

Since taking over Jordan River's only hotel a couple or so years ago, Al Stober has leaned on his bar and contemplated the comings and goings of geologists, mining engineers and drilling crews.

He says they're in and out almost as regularly as the Juan De Fuca tides that sweep the beach just across the road from his pub.

"They all stay here at some time or other," he says. "They don't say much, but you can tell just from chatting with them that they have some pretty good ore bodies back there."

To prove his point he hauls a piece of ore from a shelf and asks you to note the copper, the silver and the gold.

"High grade," he says. "Just about the best you can find."

Up in the hills behind the hotel Joe Mikkola and a crew of 25 men are grubbing deep in the mountainside to bring Cowichan Copper's flood-wrecked Sunro Mine into production.

It's a tough job and a dangerous one.

"But all mines are dangerous I guess," says Joe.

He should know. Born in Butte, Montana, he took his first flyer at mining back in the 1930s when he, his dad and an uncle bought a small gold mine.

"Didn't make much, I guess, but it was a good experience," he says quietly and with a smile.

Butte, Montana, is a long way behind the mine superintendent at Sunro.

He's been underground most of his life in Montana, Cuba, Peru and Nicaragua, mostly in copper.

As a company man he's cautious about his claims for Sunro and the surrounding area.

"There is no doubt that we'll be in production here this fall," he says. "And there's no doubt that we have an excellent grade of ore. The copper is high at two per cent and there's a little gold and silver in there too. Not much, but some."

He's an impressive man, Joe Mikkola. You leave him with the impression that he knows his business well. And when he says he thinks the main orebody will contain more than the 1,500,000 tons estimated, you tend to believe him.

He confirms that diamond drilling crews will be working in adjacent areas this summer, but he won't go beyond "there are good surface shows and outcroppings. . . . I guess there could be four or five mines around here one day."

When it comes to a market for the ore he becomes more expansive.

"If the Japanese don't want it, there's always Europe," he says. "There will be no trouble finding a market for good grade ore like this."

All of this adds up to good news for board chairman Mr. MacDonald—a man who refused to roll over and die when the mine collapsed about his ears—and the patient investors who for many months have viewed with understandable fear the possibility that their money might have been washed into the straits with the Jordan River.

Things look good at Jordan River.

Sunro in production with a payroll of 150 men, a steady payroll for lumbermen and the promise of more mines to come adds up to a nice little wave of prosperity for what was once an isolated area.

If and when those promised mines go into production, and I have no doubt that they will before many years have passed, the next step will be a B.C.-owned smelter somewhere in that area.

That isn't as far away as some people might think.

Just remember where you read it.

COURT PLACE FOR DISPUTE, LAING SAYS

OTTAWA (CP)—Resources Minister Laing expressed surprise Friday about attitudes adopted in British Columbia on a decision to refer to the Supreme Court of Canada the question of jurisdiction over mineral rights off the B.C. coast.

"I am at a loss therefore to understand how one can do anything else but refer such a question to the highest court in the land for settlement. . ."

Mr. Laing referred to statements made by Premier W. A. C. Bennett of B.C. and "more recently" by it. C. Attorney-General Robert Bonner. Mr. Bonner said Thursday the current conflict over offshore mineral rights was the "capper" in a series of "calculated irritations" from Ottawa.

Firm Faces Bankruptcy Petition

NEW YORK (AP) — Marine Midland Trust Co. of New York filed a petition Friday against Webb and Knapp, big New York real estate firm, for reorganization under Chapter 10 of the Bankruptcy Act.

Marine Midland is trustee for Webb and Knapp's 5 per cent sinking fund debentures.

The petition listed liabilities of $68,582,957 and assets of $69,682,294.

The petition said Webb and Knapp was insolvent and unable to pay its debts as they mature.

Before filing the petition, Marine Midland had called in the entire $4,298,200 of outstanding debentures.

NEW YORK (UPI) — Real estate operator William Zeckendorf Sr. last week said the bankruptcy petition filed against his Webb and Knapp, Inc. firm "came as a complete surprise" but he stated his willingness to go along with court-supervised reorganization.

Prices Hit Top Level During Week

Canadian stock prices rose to record levels in moderate trading last week.

On the Toronto Stock Exchange, four of the five major indexes calculated hourly attained highs. The situation was similar on the Montreal and Canadian Stock Exchanges.

The rise came—despite a worsening international situation—with news of possible favorable legislation on banks and higher metal prices.

Early in the week, Hudson Bay Mining, Noranda Mines and International Nickel raised the price of copper by 3.5 cents a pound to 38.5 cents, sending base metal issues in general, and coppers in particular, higher.

PULP MILL UNDER WAY

VANCOUVER (CP)—Cariboo Pulp and Paper Co. Ltd., has started preparation work on the site of its proposed $60,000,000 pulp mill at Quesnel, it was announced.

The company expects to start construction of the 750-ton-per-day mill shortly.

John Benne, president of Cariboo's parent company, Weldwood of Canada Ltd., said Cariboo expected to receive the government's proposals for a contract shortly.

Steel Takes Beating In London

LONDON (AP) — Hints that the Labor government may modify plans for outright nationalization of major British steel plants knocked millions of pounds off the value of steel shares on the London Stock Exchange last week.

Many investors suspected the final formula may prove to be that the government will buy 51 per cent—instead of all—of the shares o fthe selected plants, leaving the reminder in private hands. These investors rushed to unload their holdings.

PULL YOUR FINGER OUT DUKE TELLS INDUSTRY

LONDON (Reuters)—The Duke of Edinburgh this week told British industry for the second time in four years to "pull your finger out."

The Duke, speaking in a television interview, was reminded of the advice he first gave in 1961, and was asked if the "pull your finger out" theme—a wartime serviceman's phrase meaning "smarten up"—was still valid.

"Well, judging by the recent economic crisis, I should have thought it was still valid," he replied.
