

THE LEDGE

THE OLDEST MINING CAMP NEWSPAPER IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

VOL. XXVI.

GREENWOOD, B. C., THURSDAY, JANUARY 22, 1920.

No. 28

Cosy Homes

Make your home cosy and attractive by filling it with some of our choice and elegant Furniture, Carpets and Pictures. Use our Crockery, Granite and Tinware in your kitchens and dining rooms. Oils for machines of all kinds, coupled with a large stock of well-assorted Hardware.

T. M. GULLEY & CO.

PHONE 28.

GREENWOOD, B.C.

"STORE OF QUALITY"

We carry a large line of
MEN'S FURNISHINGS
GROCERIES
AND HARDWARE

J. G. McMyynn, Midway

I BUY AND SELL ANY MINING OR INDUSTRIAL STOCK LISTED ON ANY EXCHANGE.

I WILL BUY ANY AMOUNT OF ANY ISSUE OF THE DOMINION OF CANADA WAR LOAN

D. ST. DENIS

P. O. Box 1102 Nelson, B.C.

Just Arrived

Kipperred Herrings, Smoked Salmon, Smoked Haddie, Sable Fish, Salt Cod

Layer Figs, Dates, Peels, Currants, Raisins and all kinds of Nuts

Phone 46 LEE & BRYAN

Independent Meat Market

GREENWOOD, B.C.

BEEF, VEAL, PORK, POULTRY and FISH
HAM, BACON, ETC.

Phone 5 MEYER & WILLIAMS, Proprietors.

Laco Tungsten Lamps

15 to 60 Watt Lamps—50c each.

100 Watt Lamps—$1.25 each.

NITROGEN LAMPS	60 Watts	$1.25 each
	100 "	2.00 "
	200 "	3.50 "

Batteries Charged Repaired and Stored for Winter

Greenwood City Waterworks Co.

MEAGHER & Co., 511 Baker St.

For High Class Dry Goods, and Ladies Ready to Wear and Millinery

We Always Show The Newest First

MAIL ORDERS A SPECIALTY

RUSK'S HOTEL

MIDWAY, B. C.

Tasty meals and comfortable rooms. Meals served at any time. Sample rooms for drummers. Soft drinks, cigars and cigarettes. Pool hall in connection.

W. D. RUSK

PROPRIETOR

BANK BY MAIL

Regular saving will soon show a handsome balance in the depositor's account. It may be difficult for you to come to the bank always when you want to deposit. Send in deposits by mail—they will be as carefully handled as though you handed them over the counter.

THE CANADIAN BANK OF COMMERCE

PAID-UP CAPITAL : $15,000,000
RESERVE FUND : $15,000,000
GREENWOOD BRANCH, L. E. Brawders, Manager.

Around Home

A Presbyterian church will be built in Princeton.

Jap Oranges 75 cents a box at Rendell's store.

Bill Donnelly arrived in town last week from the prairie.

Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Stanaway have left Phoenix for Spokane.

Mrs. J. P. Flood is visiting relatives at Alexander, Missouri.

About 15 men will be kept doing development work at the Rock Candy mine on the North Fork.

W. H. Kent, of the relieving staff of the Canadian Bank of Commerce, left for Kamloops on Friday last.

Finnan Haddie, Smoked Sable Fish and Golden Fillets at Rendell's store, Greenwood.

Mr. and Mrs. C. M. Campbell and family, of Phoenix, left on Monday morning for a two weeks' visit in Vancouver.

New stock of Mitts, Gloves, Socks, Woolen Underwear Flannels, etc. G. A. Rendell.

Mr. Emery, government electrical inspector, is in town testing all the watt meters of the Greenwood City Waterworks.

E. L. Steeves, is in the Grand Forks hospital, suffering from an injury that he received while at work on the Main Kettle river.

A full supply of Royal Household flour, wheat, shorts, bran, oats, etc., on hand. G. A. Rendell.

S. R. Smith, who has been employed at the Rock Candy mill, for some month's past, was in Greenwood on Friday and Saturday.

For that nasty cough get a bottle of Rexall's Syrup of White Pine and Tar at Goodeve's Drug Store.

Owing to the dance and hockey match on Friday night the regular meeting of the G. W. V. A. will be held on Thursday, January 22nd.

The latest styles of Signet Rings in solid 14k gold for Misses, Ladies or Gentlemen at McElmorn's.

Miss Ruth Swanson, left for Pullman, this week, where she will take an advanced course in stenography at the Washington State college.

Dr. G. H. Acres was elected mayor in Grand Forks last week, defeating H. A. Sheads by a majority of 57.

H. C. Lucas, manager of the Princeton branch of the Canadian Bank of Commerce, is in town attending the annual meeting of the directors of that institution.

The 20th Annual Convention of the Associated Boards of Trade of Eastern British Columbia will be held in the City of Trail on Tuesday the 3rd day of February, 1920.

The road between Greenwood and Grand Forks is still open. On Tuesday evening the hockey players were taken to the Forks by D. McPherson and W. H. Dockstader in their autos.

On Friday evening, Jan. 23, the Boundary G. W. V. A. will hold a Dance in the Masonic Hall. Good music. Supper will be served in the banquet hall. Admission, Gentlemen $1, Ladies 50c. Dancing to commence after the hockey match.

J. "Senator" McAuley well-known in the Boundary was in Princeton last week. "Senator" was a resident of Phoenix during the early days of the camp. Lately he has been engaged in farming in Manitoba, where he sold out his interest a short time ago.

FOR SALE.—Thoroughbred white leghorn cockerels $2.00 each. Apply to Wm. Jenks, Greenwood.

Boundary Hockey

Greenwood leads in the race for the Boundary hockey honors by winning in the local rink last Friday evening by 5-2, and in Grand Forks on Tuesday evening by 1-0.

This makes the League standing as follows: Grand Forks won 1, lost 2; Greenwood won 2 and lost 1.

A good sized crowd attended the second scheduled game in the local rink last Friday evening, when Grand Forks were the local boys opponents. From the faceoff the home boys showed better form than in the previous game and a few minutes after the start the score was 1-0 in their favor.

The visitors then made an effort and were successful in tying the score.

During the remaining part of the game the Greenwood boys were the aggressors, their back checking featured the play and with accurate shooting they were able to score four more goals. A few minutes before the end of the last period the Forks scored making the final count 5-2 in Greenwood's favor.

A. J. Morrison refereed the game in a most impartial manner, and as the play was clean he did not have to send a player to the penalty box. The line-up follows:

Grand Forks:—Goal, L. F. Tepoorten; point, Eric Atwood; cover point, Clinton Atwood; rover, Ludy Frankovitch; centre, W. J. Reynolds; right wing, "Cy" Pen-

noyer (capt.); left wing, Ralph Cook. Spares, E. McIlwaine and V. Siddall.

Greenwood:—Goal, Dick Taylor; point, Bob Murray (capt.); cover, Carl Carlson; rover, Ed. Stanaway; centre, W. Almstrom; right wing, George Clarf; left wing, Jim Hallett. Spares, Ross Wood and Pete Dockstader.

On Tuesday the Greenwood team journeyed to Grand Forks and decided the third, scheduled game, when the Forks went down to defeat by 1-0. So far this proved to be the fastest match of the season, with Greenwood having the edge of the play over their opponents.

A change was made in the Greenwood line-up, Ed. Stanaway having left the Boundary, Sude Smith replaced him, who scored the only goal of the game.

The fourth match will be played in the local rink on Friday evening. The Greenwood boys are showing the best of form and as the games have been of the best, a lively contest will be expected on that night with the Forks team.

After the play the G. W. V. A. are holding a dance in the Masonic Hall.

Sea-sick

"Where is Dead sea Tommy?" asked the teacher.

"Don't know, ma'am," was the candid reply.

"Don't know where the Dead sea is?" There was scorn in the teacher's voice.

"No, ma'am," came the reply.

"I didn't even know any of them was sick."

Orchids and Mignonette

A woman lived in a garden once,
On a quiet village street:
Where the grass was green with the tender rains

And shaded by elms from the heat:
Where primrose and daisy and mignonette
Grew riotously at her feet.

But the woman who heard of the jungle
Where strange young orchids grow,
(Why women will do these foolish things,
Only God in his wisdom can know.)

But she left her garden and took the trail

That leads where the wise don't go.

Oh, yes, she found the orchids,
But women don't ever forget
And she dreams in the heat of the jungle
Of a garden with clean rain wet,
And over the scentless orchids
Drifts the odor of mignonette!

Western Float

Allenby boasts of a first-class skating rink.

The yellow peril may be driven out of the Okanagan.

Toronto will again have daylight saving this year.

The Fireman of Grand Forks want a fire auto truck.

Fake prescription forms for liquor are being used in Calgary.

Mrs. W. Garland Foster is the first woman councillor of Nelson.

It was 63 below zero during a cold snap last month at Black Hills in the Yukon.

The area of the Dominion of Canada is nearly as large as that of the whole of Europe.

Dawson people will make the experiment of raising goats in the Yukon the coming season.

J. C. Hopkins, a widely known globe trotter, died recently in Duncan, at the age of 84.

The British Columbia Department of Education has placed music officially on the school curriculum.

It is expected that the Kamloops-Okanagan branch of the C. N. R. will be completed and in operation next fall.

The Shands roadhouse at the mouth of the Stewart river, Yukon, was recently destroyed by fire. It was a landmark of '98.

Henry Nordhof, a pioneer of the Yukon, was burned to death when his cabin was destroyed by fire, last month. He went north in '98.

Martin Anderson, an old-timer of the Slokan district, who had resided in the vicinity of South Slokan, for the past 20 years, died on January 17.

Newfoundland now boasts of fifteen feet of snow, the heaviest in the history of that Dominion. Might let this section have some of it, as it would help out the loggers and other forest workers.

The Great Northern will make extensive improvements at Cawston. This railway will build a loading platform, freight shed, passenger shelter and platform, and 150 feet of spur track at that point.

The Canadian Raider, one of the new ships being built at Vancouver for Canada's national merchant marine, has been chartered to carry 2,500,000 feet of B. C. lumber to Australia on her maiden voyage.

It is reported that Greenwood is due for a good mining boom in the near future. That town is entitled to something different than it has had for many years past, and if a mining boom is coming that will prove a benefit to the town and the people it can't come any too soon.—Kamloops Standard Sentinel.

Mining News

The 600 ton test mill which is to treat the zinc ore from the Sullivan mine, was completed in Trail last week.

Ore carrying between 15 and 20 per cent. copper was struck recently, in the Castledale mine, near Golden.

The old winze on the Evening Star mine, Dayton creek, will be unwatered, with a view to having it undergo a thorough examination.

The Hedley Gold Mining company received $18,000 during the current year for the arsenic contained in the ore that was shipped to the Tacoma smelter.

Arizona leads the Western States in metal production with the value of the minerals produced at $108,707,000 during 1919. This is nearly a 50 per cent. decline over 1918.

A four mile spur will be built to the colliery at Coalmont this year, when that mine will become an important producer. At present the coal is being hauled from the mine by four auto trucks.

The recent snow fall in the Slokan has helped the ore shippers in that camp. Four-horse teams are hauling ore from the Ottawa to Slokan City; the Republic mine, on Lemon creek, has started to raw-hide its high-grade silver-lead ore down to Slokan City.

Shippers of ore to the Trail smelter have made a good start this year. For the two first weeks of the year, a grand total of 12,214 tons has been received at this smelter. During that period the Bell, Beaverdell, shipped 74 tons, and the Emma, Coltern, 1228 tons.

The Sunloch Copper properties within two miles of the power station of the British Columbia Electric at Jordan river, and about 43 miles from Victoria, have been taken over by the Consolidated Mining & Smelting company, of Trail, according to a Victoria report. Extensive development work will be commenced on the property at once, as the low grade ore showing is most promising.

Penticton Development Co. is again showing signs of activity and the first meeting of the directors for a number of months past was held on Saturday, Jan. 3, at which time it was determined to go ahead and put in a concentrator at the property owned by the company, known as the Torpedo group, says the Northwest Mining Truth of Spokane. The ground is located close to Okanagan lake, B.C., and was worked from 1907 to 1910 by a Vancouver company. A car shipped last summer gave satisfactory returns.

Greenwood Theatre

THURSDAY, JANUARY 29th

COMMENCING AT 8:15 P. M.

DON'T FAIL TO SEE

Carveth Wells

THE JUNGLE EXPLORER

AND HIS

Real Jungle Pictures

Made from his own photos and in Natural Colors also GORGEOUS COSTUMES

TWO HOURS SPLENDID SHOW BY THIS

Well-known Lyceum and Chautauqua Entertainer

Now on his way back to the jungle where he lived for six years

Exploring for the British Government

Pirates, Peacocks, Huge Snakes, Apes, Tigers, Crocodiles,

Jungle Dwarfs, and Elephant Catching

BRING YOUR CHILDREN. Front seats are specially reserved for them

Admission: Adults, 55c, Children, 25c

You can go to the Movies any day—this is NOT A MOVIE.

It is much better

DO YOU KNOW WHY

That old sore or skin disease of yours breaks out again? It's because the remedies you have been using do not get to the root of the disease, but remain on the surface. Try Zam-Buk! It penetrates to the underlying tissues, destroys all germs and cures from the "root" up. Hence Zam-Buk cures are lasting. All dealers, 50c. box.

Zam-Buk

Peace and Its Obligations

With the formal exchange of ratifications of the Peace Treaty of Versailles by Germany and the great powers, with the exception of the United States, and many of the lesser powers, the Great War came to an official and legal end on Saturday, January 10, 1920, and peace in an international sense once more prevails in a world distracted by war for over five years.

This exchange of ratifications, and the official promulgation of peace, might have been accomplished much sooner but for the tardy act of the Germans in sinking their surrendered fleet at Scapa Flow during the progress of the peace negotiations. As a result of that outrage, the Allies insisted upon a protocol to the Peace Treaty, and this protocol Germany was compelled to sign on January 10, before the exchange of ratifications took place.

Peace is now an accomplished fact, and with the coming into effect of the Treaty of Versailles the League of Nations also becomes an established organization. It is no longer merely a paper organization, a document of principles, outlining certain machinery for the preservation of the peace now proclaimed. It is a body officially recognized by most of the nations of the world, an organization in which the nations have membership, and to the carrying out of whose aims and objects they are pledged.

For the time being Germany and the other nations which were in alliance with Germany in the war are not admitted to membership in the League. They must first prove their sincerity and honesty of purpose in carrying out the objects of the League. Then and only then will they be admitted to full membership. The United States is not a member as yet, because, owing to political differences in that country, which are acute because of the approaching presidential election, the senate has not yet ratified the Peace Treaty with its League of Nations covenant. It is inconceivable, however, that the United States will refuse to ratify the Treaty of Versailles and join the League. Such a refusal would be a denial of everything for which the American people went to war.

Included in the covenant of the League of Nations is the new international labor organization, which aims at the establishment of a new and better order of things for industrial workers throughout the world. Not only is the League an established fact, but it has already held its first meeting at Paris and taken steps for the efficient administration of its many complex problems entrusted to its care, and in the solution of which alone will be found a guarantee of permanent peace.

But while international peace has been again established, a gigantic task still confronts all nations in the bringing about of domestic peace and wholehearted co-operation among the peoples of their respective countries. The Great War created such a world upheaval, and resulted in such a loosening and breaking away from the foundations and accepted conditions of the past, largely of destroying old political ties and changing economic conditions everywhere, that men today are more or less unsettled in their ideas. It is a time when great leaders, men of conviction and courage, are needed, and when all people require to exercise a large degree of patience and a high and lofty patriotism.

In the turmoil, suffering and sorrows of the Great War mankind hopes that many of the old abuses and evils of the past have been destroyed; that all the destruction that took place was not bad, but that much of it will prove to have been good. On the other hand, mankind also hopes that because of the sacrifices made, the sufferings borne, the patriotism and heroism displayed, there will emerge a nobler conception of man's duty to his fellowmen, a higher standard in religion, in intellectual attainment, in social relations, in community life and service.

In this new peace era, — in this dawning in the twentieth century of a changed period in the world's history, — the people of all nations should turn their backs on the past, and, forgetting those things which are behind, press onward with faces alight and eager hands to grasp the more glorious things that lie ahead. The old ignominious strife in party politics, the cruelty and oppression and ruthlessness in business competition, between Capital and Labor, between the classes and the masses, should be superseded by a new spirit and a ready willingness to co-operate with the one with the other for the good of all.

We have undergone all the sufferings, the horrors, the losses of the Great War. We have borne up and worked together with a national determination to achieve victory for the right. We have accepted our losses in a splendid spirit. Now, in the interests of all and of our common country which by our efforts we have saved from enemy despoliation, let us remain united, united more firmly than ever, in cordial co-operation to bring out of the Great Sorrow the maximum of blessing to all.

Minard's Liniment Cures Diphtheria.

Alberta's Dairy Production

Provincial Department of Agriculture Has Given Real Aid to the Creamery Business.

During 1918 Alberta stood third among the provinces of the Dominion in the amount of creamery butter manufactured and marketed. "For a baby western province to have achieved this enviable record in so short a time is cause for congratulation," says the "Alberta Farmer" editorially. "One special reason for the fine showing we are making lies in the fact that, climatologically, we are specially favored for this particular business. There is no province in the whole Dominion where natural dairying advantages are so numerous, or where the business offers such splendid rewards for minimum effort of an intelligent sort.

For what we have already achieved credit is to a considerable extent due to the provincial department of agriculture, which has given real aid to the creamery business, and is still continuing that aid. Last year we obtained more than four millions for our creamery butter product. With a continuance of intelligent dairying and the accessions to the ranks of our dairymen that we have right to expect, it should not be long before this income is doubled and trebled. There is practically no limit to the possibilities of the business in Alberta, when the export trade is taken into account."

The man who doesn't have the services of that great teacher, experience, may live to a green old age.

No man was ever blamed for being a gentleman, but many are accused of it.

Misfortune is the filter that separates the true friends from the counterfeit.

State of Ohio, City of Toledo, Lucas County, ss.

Frank J. Cheney makes oath that he is senior partner of the firm of F. J. Cheney & Co., doing business in the City of Toledo, County and State aforesaid, and that said firm will pay the sum of ONE HUNDRED DOLLARS for any case of Catarrh that cannot be cured by the use of HALL'S CATHARTIC MEDICINE.

Sworn to before me and subscribed in my presence, this 6th day of December, A.D. 1920.

(Seal) A. W. Gleason, Notary Public.

HALL'S CATHARTIC MEDICINE is taken internally and acts through the blood on the mucous surfaces of the system.

Druggists, 7c. Testimonials free.

F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio.

Looking to British Columbia for Lumber.

With Washington and Oregon mills reported to be booked up to capacity, eastern American timber buyers are now looking to Canada.

A. H. Purcell, of New York, representative of a big timber brokerage firm, has been in Vancouver for the past two or three weeks for that purpose, and is understood to have placed, or to be about to place, several large orders.

CHILBLAINS

Easily and Quickly Cured with
EGYPTIAN LINIMENT
For Sale by All Dealers
Douglas & Co., Prop'rs. Nanaimo, Ont.

Means Agricultural Prosperity

One Person in Every Twelve in Saskatchewan Owns an Auto.

When a province with a population of about 750,000 has almost 59,000 automobiles in use, or an average of one to every twelve persons, it is fairly obvious that that province is enjoying a reasonable amount of prosperity. This, in a community where the majority of its population is dependent on the products of the land, means agricultural prosperity.

More than 58,820 automobile licenses were taken out in the province of Saskatchewan, or approximately 8,000 in excess of the number issued in 1918, according to figures compiled by the motor license department of the Saskatchewan government.

It's a poor rule that isn't good for more than one kick.

ARE YOU WEAK AND RUN DOWN?

In This Condition Only a Tonic Medicine Can Renew Your Health.

The condition of being "run down" is one that doctors do not recognize as a disease. The physician of today who gets his training in a hospital where only severe disorders are encountered knows little about it. But those who are run down in health know that it is not a fancied affliction. The expression "run down," applied to health means a condition in which all the bodily functions are enfeebled. Appetite fails, the digestion is impaired, the nerves are impoverished, the complexion becomes pale or waxy, there is no animation, but rather worry and mental depression. Fatigue is a constant symptom. No particular organ being affected, you must look for relief to the blood. As it circulates through every part of the body, any improvement in the condition of the blood is quickly felt throughout the entire system. As a restorer of the blood and builder of weak nerves Dr. Williams' Pink Pills stand at the head of all tonic medicines. Every dose of these pills helps to enrich the blood and strengthen the nerves, and thus the various organs regain their tone and the body recovers its full vigor.

Ample proof of this is given in the statement of Mr. William Devine, Gerard street east, Toronto, who says: "Two years ago while employed as a conductor on the Toronto Street Railway, I became much run down. I consulted a doctor who gave me medicine, but it proved fruitless as I was constantly growing weaker. My appetite completely failed and I fell away in weight until I only weighed 125 pounds. I was sometimes taken with fainting spells, and finally felt compelled to resign my position. I tried what I thought was lighter work, but with no better results. I was growing weaker and weaker. One day a friend urged me to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, but by this time I was heartily tired of medicine, as nothing I had taken did me any good. Finally he bought me a box of the pills, and I could no longer refuse to try them. After a time I felt they were helping me and then a glad cry continued their use, with the result that I was finally enabled to go back to my old position fully restored to health. I owe this splendid condition to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and can strongly recommend them to any one suffering as I did."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills can be obtained through any medicine dealer, or may be had by mail, post paid, at 50 cents a box or by sending $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Had It In Mind.
Papa (from the next room): "Ethel, aren't you ready to light the gas in there?"
Ethel: "Yes, papa; we are just speaking of it—striking a match."—Pearson's Weekly.

"Which has the harder life, coffee or tea?"
"Tea; for while coffee can settle down tea is compelled to draw."

Is Your Wife Bad Tempered?
Chances are she has corns that ache like fury. Buy her a bottle of Putnam's Corn Extractor. It acts painlessly, gives instant relief, and cures every kind of corn. Insist on getting only Putnam's Extractor, 25c. at all dealers.

Elephants Good Workers
Drivers Have Special Language Which the Animals Understand.

Elephants do their best work in driving timber, working it with the current, releasing logs from jams and rolling the stranded logs back into the water. The elephant drivers have a special "elephant" language which the animals understand—a special elephant vocabulary with such terms as "Push sideways," "Roll," "Pull out," "Stop," "Lift your chains." They are magnificent swimmers. When they swim from bank to bank, herding the logs that require their special attention, you see nothing of them except the tips of their trunks through which they breathe, and the mahouts, or drivers, who are generally in water up to their waists. If a big stack of jam breaks suddenly when elephants are working, they know the danger of being overtaken. They trumpet and clear off to either bank or swim downstream as fast as they can go.

W. N. U. 1299

Edmonton Stockyards Have A Good Year

November Was the Heaviest Month In Cattle Receipts.
Livestock to the value of $5,559,599 was handled at Edmonton, Alberta, in 1919. Of this amount $3,913,472 represents cattle and $24,430 hogs.

The receipts at the yards show a heavy advance over preceding years. The total cars received in 1919 numbered 816, as compared with 3,147 cars in 1918 and 2,086 in 1917. November was the heaviest month in respect to cattle receipts and January in hog receipts.

There was also an increased business in horses, the total number handled being 8,685, as compared with 380 in 1917. Their value is put at $564,523.

Shipments to the United States for the year totalled 11,150 cattle and 438 calves. Country points in Canada took 44,856 cattle, 3,291 calves, 3,945 hogs, and 14,405 sheep. Canadian packers, including local butchers, for the first eight months of the year took 13,101 cattle, 2,496 calves, 20,642 hogs, and 3,381 sheep.

Canadian Army Back in Civil Life

Over Three Hundred Thousand Into Civilian Occupations Since the War

Since the armistice, 272,537 officers and men have been repatriated from overseas. Prior to the armistice, 65,600 officers and men had been returned to Canada and demobilized. This is a total of 338,000 members of the Canadian expeditionary force who have been turned back into civilian occupations. It does not include the large force of men who were enrolled in the army and did not get overseas previous to armistice day.

Of the 338,000 returned officers and men, 44,278 have applied to the Soldier Settlement Board for qualification certificates, to enable them to take up land and secure the benefits of the soldier settlement act. The number of applications approved at the close of the year was 33,496.

The district offices of the board, especially in the western provinces, have been busy answering enquiries and taking care of the steady stream of ex-service men who are looking for suitable land and making the necessary preparations to apply for loans. A great rush is expected in the early spring, when several Indian and forest reserves will be opened for entry.

Watching Immigrants

Federal Authorities Scrutinizing Entries for Possible Reds.

Immigration authorities at Ottawa, while admitting that the hunted "reds" of the United States will endeavor to secure sanctuary in Canada, point out that the immigration laws of Canada are very strictly opposed to the entrance of undesirable, that immigration officers all along the border are on the alert to keep them out and that in addition the mounted police cordon is now spread from the Pacific through the prairie provinces down toward Rainy river and Thunder bay. As a matter of fact, several intending entrants already have been barred back on suspicion; others may be held pending investigation and a clean bill is being demanded of all would-be immigrants.

Minard's Liniment Cures Gargery in Cows.

Sunny Victoria

Alberta Has Another Rival to Contend With.

It savors almost of "rubbing it in" to emphasize Victoria's sunshine during the year just closed. She has no doubt claims with which one immediately links sunshine records. Nor do her people have to face extremes which demand arctic apparel in winter and filmy draperies in summer. They are naturally proud, therefore, that the sun shone brightly in Victoria for 2,258 hours during 1919 and that she was by no means minus all the other attributes which give her possession not only of a sunshine record for the province, but one of the most equable climates in the world.

Heading Him Off.
"Now, Rolle, I'll tell you a nice fairy story. Once there was a wood-chopper."

"Aw, cut it out. I'm tired of hearing about the Kaiser."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Good things may be cheap, but cheap things are seldom good.

The Julian Battle.

Surgeon Rear-Admiral Sir Robert Hill has given, for the first time, statistics of the casualties at Jutland. These amounted to 6,014 killed and 674 wounded. The total strength of the Grand Fleet he gives as 60,000, so that the casualties amount to 11 per cent, and the killed to 10 per cent.

The vast preponderance of killed over wounded gives us some idea of the utter destructiveness of modern naval warfare. It is not entirely due to the loss of practically the whole of a ship's complement if that vessel is sunk. The Lion, which was heavily engaged, but not sunk, had ninety-five killed and fifty-one wounded. Nearly every injury would be sustained from the most colossal projectiles yet devised by man.

The mace, now an emblem of sovereignty or authority, was originally a club armed with iron, and used in war. Both sword and mace are emblems of dignity suited to the times when men were about in armour, and sovereigns needed champions to vindicate their rights.

Use Bovril in your cooking. It flavours, enriches, nourishes more.

The Body-building Power of Bovril has been proved by tests on 100 men in the army, of whom 10 to 20 times the amount of Bovril is taken.

Use Bovril in your cooking. It flavours, enriches, nourishes more.

Use Bovril in your cooking. It flavours, enriches, nourishes more.

Use Bovril in your cooking. It flavours, enriches, nourishes more.

Use Bovril in your cooking. It flavours, enriches, nourishes more.

Use Bovril in your cooking. It flavours, enriches, nourishes more.

Use Bovril in your cooking. It flavours, enriches, nourishes more.

Use Bovril in your cooking. It flavours, enriches, nourishes more.

Forestall Colds, Chills and Influenza

Take BOVRIL

Use Bovril in your cooking. It flavours, enriches, nourishes more.

The Body-building Power of Bovril has been proved by tests on 100 men in the army, of whom 10 to 20 times the amount of Bovril is taken.

Use Bovril in your cooking. It flavours, enriches, nourishes more.

Use Bovril in your cooking. It flavours, enriches, nourishes more.

Use Bovril in your cooking. It flavours, enriches, nourishes more.

Use Bovril in your cooking. It flavours, enriches, nourishes more.

Use Bovril in your cooking. It flavours, enriches, nourishes more.

Use Bovril in your cooking. It flavours, enriches, nourishes more.

Use Bovril in your cooking. It flavours, enriches, nourishes more.

Use Bovril in your cooking. It flavours, enriches, nourishes more.

Use Bovril in your cooking. It flavours, enriches, nourishes more.

Use Bovril in your cooking. It flavours, enriches, nourishes more.

Use Bovril in your cooking. It flavours, enriches, nourishes more.

Use Bovril in your cooking. It flavours, enriches, nourishes more.

Use Bovril in your cooking. It flavours, enriches, nourishes more.

Use Bovril in your cooking. It flavours, enriches, nourishes more.

Use Bovril in your cooking. It flavours, enriches, nourishes more.

Use Bovril in your cooking. It flavours, enriches, nourishes more.

Use Bovril in your cooking. It flavours, enriches, nourishes more.

Use Bovril in your cooking. It flavours, enriches, nourishes more.

Use Bovril in your cooking. It flavours, enriches, nourishes more.

Use Bovril in your cooking. It flavours, enriches, nourishes more.

Use Bovril in your cooking. It flavours, enriches, nourishes more.

Use Bovril in your cooking. It flavours, enriches, nourishes more.

Use Bovril in your cooking. It flavours, enriches, nourishes more.

Use Bovril in your cooking. It flavours, enriches, nourishes more.

Use Bovril in your cooking. It flavours, enriches, nourishes more.

Use Bovril in your cooking. It flavours, enriches, nourishes more.

Use Bovril in your cooking. It flavours, enriches, nourishes more.

Use Bovril in your cooking. It flavours, enriches, nourishes more.

Use Bovril in your cooking. It flavours, enriches, nourishes more.

Use Bovril in your cooking. It flavours, enriches, nourishes more.

Use Bovril in your cooking. It flavours, enriches, nourishes more.

Use Bovril in your cooking. It flavours, enriches, nourishes more.

Use Bovril in your cooking. It flavours, enriches, nourishes more.

Use Bovril in your cooking. It flavours, enriches, nourishes more.

Use Bovril in your cooking. It flavours, enriches, nourishes more.

Use Bovril in your cooking. It flavours, enriches, nourishes more.

Use Bovril in your cooking. It flavours, enriches, nourishes more.

Use Bovril in your cooking. It flavours, enriches, nourishes more.

Use Bovril in your cooking. It flavours, enriches, nourishes more.

Use Bovril in your cooking. It flavours, enriches, nourishes more.

Use Bovril in your cooking. It flavours, enriches, nourishes more.

Use Bovril in your cooking. It flavours, enriches, nourishes more.

Use Bovril in your cooking. It flavours, enriches, nourishes more.

Co-Operative Wool Marketing

Over Two Million Pounds Was Contributed By the West.

The Canadian Wool Growers, Limited, a farmers' co-operative organization which handles the sale of most of the wool produced in Canada, has now 1,923 shareholders. Of these, eight hundred are in the West; 254 in Manitoba, 313 in Saskatchewan and 233 in Alberta.

The total amount of wool handled this year was 3,811,366 pounds, of which 2,803,443 had been contributed by the West. All the western wool has been sold excepting 225,000 pounds, which it was decided to buy from the shippers at what they expressed would be the market price and close up the business for the year.

The close of the year killed the demand for coarser wool fabrics and made slow sales, but a better demand is to be expected as soon as a depletion of the flocks in Australia, New Zealand and the Argentine is reported.

To Prevent Influenza

Colds cause Grip and Influenza—LAXATIVE BROMO QUININE Tablets remove the cause. There is only one "Bromo Quinine." E. W. GROVES signature on box. 30c.

Using the Earth's Hot Water

Steaming Water That Would Be Sufficient to Heat Every Building in Large Town

People in the western part of America, who have to buy coal and oil for heating at constantly higher prices, naturally look some what longingly at the great hot springs in their vicinity. These hot springs appear in a broad path that stretches diagonally across several states, from such places as the meadows above the Yosemite, through Nevada, and taking in the Yellowstone Park in Wyoming. The great Comstock mines at Virginia City, Nevada, have always been very hot, and even today the lower levels are filled with steaming water that would be sufficient to heat every building in a town of considerable size, if engineering ingenuity could devise the way to carry it to the nearby towns. Water boiling, bubbling, and bursting to the surface, in miniature craters and geysers, is one of the curiosities of the western states. Even today a number of farmhouses have running hot water, and some few are heated, from this underground supply.—Christian Science Monitor.

Census of Dairy Industry.

According to an official census of the dairy industry taken in 1917, the total number of creameries and factories in operation in Canada is 3,418, including 949 creameries, 1,900 cheese factories, 549 combined factories producing both butter and cheese, and 23 condensed milk factories. The total number of patrons is 248,683. The province of Quebec led in creameries and was a close second to Ontario in cheese factories.

Last year the vessels built in Canada had a tonnage of 53,912 tons. During the year the tonnage of vessels entered inward and outward at Canadian ports, sea-going and inland, but not including coasting vessels, had a tonnage of 66,802,488 tons. The tonnage of vessels engaged in the coasting trade was 61,462,600, making a total of 128,265,088 tons.

Gone Stale.

"Remember how the men in the theatre used to rush out for a breath of fresh air?"
"Yep. What of it?"
"The fresh air is still there, isn't it?"
"I dunno. Why?"
"It doesn't seem worth going after any more."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Occasionally when a man attempts to stand on his dignity some one spoils it by sitting on it.

Shake the hands of some people and give some other people the shake.

ONLY TABLETS MARKED "BAYER" ARE ASPIRIN

Not Aspirin at All without the "Bayer Cross"

The name "Bayer" identifies the only genuine Aspirin—the Aspirin prescribed by physicians for over nineteen years and now made in Canada.

Always buy an unbroken package of "Bayer Tablets of Aspirin," which contains 12 tablets each.

There is only one Aspirin—"Bayer." You must get "Bayer."

Aspirin is the trade mark (registered in Canada) of Bayer Manufacturing Co. of Germany, and it is well known that Aspirin is a Bayer product, and that the Bayer Cross is the Bayer trade mark.

Contains proper directions for Colds, Rheumatism, Toothache, Earache, Neuralgia, Lumbago, Rheumatism, Neuritis, Joint Pains, and Pain generally.

Tin boxes of 12 tablets each, but a few cents. Larger "Bayer" packages.

Do not suffer another day with PILES. Dr. Chase's Ointment will cure you in one week, and as certainly cure you as a box of Quinine, or Eucalypti, or any other medicine. The Ointment is sold in all drug stores, or by mail, enclosing 2c. stamp to pay postage.

Do not suffer another day with PILES. Dr. Chase's Ointment will cure you in one week, and as certainly cure you as a box of Quinine, or Eucalypti, or any other medicine. The Ointment is sold in all drug stores, or by mail, enclosing 2c. stamp to pay postage.

Do not suffer another day with PILES. Dr. Chase's Ointment will cure you in one week, and as certainly cure you as a box of Quinine, or Eucalypti, or any other medicine. The Ointment is sold in all drug stores, or by mail, enclosing 2c. stamp to pay postage.

Do not suffer another day with PILES. Dr. Chase's Ointment will cure you in one week, and as certainly cure you as a box of Quinine, or Eucalypti, or any other medicine. The Ointment is sold in all drug stores, or by mail, enclosing 2c. stamp to pay postage.

Do not suffer another day with PILES. Dr. Chase's Ointment will cure you in one week, and as certainly cure you as a box of Quinine, or Eucalypti, or any other medicine. The Ointment is sold in all drug stores, or by mail, enclosing 2c. stamp to pay postage.

CUTICURA HEALS BABY'S FACE

Could Not Sleep Eruption Itched and Burned So.

"I noticed a little pimple on my baby's face. I thought it was from the sun but it kept getting worse and the skin was red and very hot. He could not sleep or rest the eruption itched and burned so, and it caused him to scratch. I was quite discouraged."

"I saw an advertisement for Cuticura Soap

Appendicitis Prevented Life Lengthened Health Maintained

Thousands Finding Wonderful Benefit in a Simple Home Remedy That Costs But a Quarter.

Doctors say if people kept their bowels in proper order there would be no such disease as appendicitis. It is due solely to neglect, and is therefore preventable.

If you have constipation, bad breath or headache you need medicine right away.

The moment you suspect your bowels are clogged you should take Dr. Hamilton's Pills, the smoothest regulator of them all. They move the bowels and cleanse the liver so smoothly you scarcely notice the effect. But you can get the action just the same. Taken at night you wake up next morning, clear-headed, hungry, rested, energetic, feeling like a different man.

Why don't you spend a quarter to-day and try Dr. Hamilton's Pills. They work so easy, just as nature would order, never gripe or cause headache. Finest thing for folks that are out of sorts, depressed, lacking in color and spirits.

Folks that use Dr. Hamilton's Pills are never sick, never an ache or a pain—feel good all the time simply because their system is clean, regulated and healthy. This you can easily prove yourself.

Filling His Own Shoes

— BY —
HENRY C. ROWLAND

Copyrighted. Printed by special arrangement with Thos. Allen, Toronto.

(Continued.)

In the urgency of his own immediate affairs, Ruggles made no attempt to see Darthea or Miss Chabland, but a great surprise from another quarter was in store for him. He had come into the hotel rather tired from an afternoon's shopping, and was leaning on his stick waiting for the lift, when a quiet, low-pitched voice at his elbow said:

"How do you do, Mr. Ruggles?" Ruggles started violently at his stout, walking stick slipped on the polished parquet, and his injured ankle, being as yet unable to support the sudden strain thus thrown upon it, gave under him and he fell. An attendant sprang to his assistance, and as he struggled to his feet with a pale face from shock and the sudden twinge of pain in the wounded ankle, he looked into the violet eyes of Ruth, who was watching him with a curious startled expression, surprised at the effect of her quiet greeting and a trifle vexed at his apparent awkwardness.

The blood rushed back into Ruggles' face as he took the small gloved hand which she gravely offered him.

"How do you do, Miss Downing?" he answered, in some confusion. "I did not now that you were in Paris."

"My aunt and I have just got here from London, she answered. "We are only over for a few days to do some shopping. And how have you been since we last met?"

"Oh—pretty well, thank you," Ruggles replied, a little vaguely. "I'm just back from Turkey."

"From Turkey," she echoed, slightly raising her eyebrows.

"Yes," Ruggles answered. "I went out there the day after—after I saw you here, with a doctor in the Red Cross—Lord Pembroke."

"Really?" Her eyes examined him with a sudden intense interest. "Did you serve with the Red Cross?"

"Yes," Ruggles answered. "That is, until I got wounded, and got shot in the ankle on the Tschataldscha lines."

Ruth glanced down instinctively, and as she saw the manner in which Ruggles was supporting himself, her face softened.

"Oh, I'm so sorry!" she said, and raised her eyes to his face. "I must have known it. Can't you come up for a few minutes? My aunt is resting, and we can have a little chat before tea time. Or have you come to call on somebody?"

"Oh, no," Ruggles answered. "I'm stopping here."

Ruth did not show the surprise that this announcement gave her. She reflected quickly that some consoling voice of some Ottoman official, as on change must have occurred in Ruggles' affairs, to enable him to afford the Carlton. Then it occurred to her that he might possibly be in the search for a Turkish man-servant in a sitting beside the chauffeur of a waiting motor-car.

"Sit right down and put your foot on this thing," said Ruth, hauling an armchair from its corner and pushing an ottoman in front of it. Ruggles' limping gait had not escaped her. "Did you wrench your ankle when you came shipped?"

"Oh, no," said Ruggles. "It just went out from under me. Pembroke says that I'll limp for the rest of my life. No more bicycling for me, I guess."

"What was worth it?" asked Ruth, and dropped into a chair facing him.

"Why—everything that happened afterwards—and a whole lot that had happened before. We did some pretty good work out there. That is, Pembroke did—and I helped."

"Who is Pembroke?" Ruth asked. "You spoke of him downstairs as 'Lord Pembroke.' How did you get to know him?"

"Well, it was like this," said Ruggles; "after I left you that day, I went home and found a letter from the European general manager saying that the company had decided to give the management of the Vienna store to another man—a fellow named Lorenz, who had been in the shoe business in Vienna and knew the trade. Maybe he was a better man for the job than I was, but I felt awful sore about it, because I felt that the company had as good as promised it to me."

"I don't blame you," said Ruth, who, by certain subtle methods of her own, had sifted the affair quite to the bottom and knew almost as much about it as Ruggles himself. But she wanted to hear his version and, dropping her chin in her hand, she fixed her thoughtful sapphire eyes on his face and encouraged him to talk.

"Coming just as it did," said Ruggles, "made me sick, clear through. You see, it sort of put me in a bad light with people who thought that I was trying to bluff them about my real position with the company. So I made up my mind to quit the company then and there, but before I left, I wanted to tell that lying Durand, the manager of the Paris store, just what I thought of him, and I wanted to tell Lorenz, too. Both of them had pretended to be good friends of mine, and all the while they'd been working behind my back to do me out of the job. So I went into the store and told them. All I intended to do was just that. I had no more idea of starting anything than I had of having a fight with a light here in the office of this hotel. I thought too much of the company for that."

"Who began the row?" Ruth asked, never taking her eyes from Ruggles' face.

"Lorenz did. He couldn't stand for what I said to him and grabbed me by the arm and tried to throw me out. But suddenly I saw red, and when Durand and Wagner—and I don't know who else butted in, I guess I just ran amuck, and started to clean out the place. I don't seem to remember just what did happen. But there was a man in the store that I'd met that morning on the Avenue du Bois, and he got me out of the place and took me to the Madrid for lunch. Well, it turned out that he was Lord Pembroke, an English surgeon, on his way out to Turkey to work with the Red Cross. I managed to persuade him to take me on as his orderly—and I've been out there ever since."

"Are you his orderly still?" Ruth asked.

Ruggles smiled. "No," said he. "I might be, though, if it hadn't been for one of those things that can only happen in war, I guess. Pembroke had rigged up a field hospital, scarcely more than a dressing-station, out on the Tschataldscha lines, and we were hard at work there one night when the colonel in command, a fine old Turk named Hamid Pasha, sent word that he was just starting out to make his rounds and thought Pembroke might like to go with him. But Pembroke was mighty busy, so he sent me along to see if there were many wounded there. I had brought in a couple of our infantry made a bayonet charge and drove the Bulgarians back. I didn't know anything about that part of it, as I'd got a crack across the head with the butt of a rifle. The colonel was shot through the body, and I got my ankle smashed by a bullet and a bayonet stuck through my arm and one or two other wounds, and was all in."

"I should think that you might have been," said Ruth. Her tone was dry, but her eyes were glowing and her breath coming quickly. "And what then?"

guess," he added a little wistfully; then hastened to say: "I've got no kick coming, though. It was worth it."

"What was worth it?" asked Ruth, and dropped into a chair facing him.

"Why—everything that happened afterwards—and a whole lot that had happened before. We did some pretty good work out there. That is, Pembroke did—and I helped."

"Who is Pembroke?" Ruth asked. "You spoke of him downstairs as 'Lord Pembroke.' How did you get to know him?"

"Well, it was like this," said Ruggles; "after I left you that day, I went home and found a letter from the European general manager saying that the company had decided to give the management of the Vienna store to another man—a fellow named Lorenz, who had been in the shoe business in Vienna and knew the trade. Maybe he was a better man for the job than I was, but I felt awful sore about it, because I felt that the company had as good as promised it to me."

"I don't blame you," said Ruth, who, by certain subtle methods of her own, had sifted the affair quite to the bottom and knew almost as much about it as Ruggles himself. But she wanted to hear his version and, dropping her chin in her hand, she fixed her thoughtful sapphire eyes on his face and encouraged him to talk.

"Coming just as it did," said Ruggles, "made me sick, clear through. You see, it sort of put me in a bad light with people who thought that I was trying to bluff them about my real position with the company. So I made up my mind to quit the company then and there, but before I left, I wanted to tell that lying Durand, the manager of the Paris store, just what I thought of him, and I wanted to tell Lorenz, too. Both of them had pretended to be good friends of mine, and all the while they'd been working behind my back to do me out of the job. So I went into the store and told them. All I intended to do was just that. I had no more idea of starting anything than I had of having a fight with a light here in the office of this hotel. I thought too much of the company for that."

"Who began the row?" Ruth asked, never taking her eyes from Ruggles' face.

"Lorenz did. He couldn't stand for what I said to him and grabbed me by the arm and tried to throw me out. But suddenly I saw red, and when Durand and Wagner—and I don't know who else butted in, I guess I just ran amuck, and started to clean out the place. I don't seem to remember just what did happen. But there was a man in the store that I'd met that morning on the Avenue du Bois, and he got me out of the place and took me to the Madrid for lunch. Well, it turned out that he was Lord Pembroke, an English surgeon, on his way out to Turkey to work with the Red Cross. I managed to persuade him to take me on as his orderly—and I've been out there ever since."

"Are you his orderly still?" Ruth asked.

Ruggles smiled. "No," said he. "I might be, though, if it hadn't been for one of those things that can only happen in war, I guess. Pembroke had rigged up a field hospital, scarcely more than a dressing-station, out on the Tschataldscha lines, and we were hard at work there one night when the colonel in command, a fine old Turk named Hamid Pasha, sent word that he was just starting out to make his rounds and thought Pembroke might like to go with him. But Pembroke was mighty busy, so he sent me along to see if there were many wounded there. I had brought in a couple of our infantry made a bayonet charge and drove the Bulgarians back. I didn't know anything about that part of it, as I'd got a crack across the head with the butt of a rifle. The colonel was shot through the body, and I got my ankle smashed by a bullet and a bayonet stuck through my arm and one or two other wounds, and was all in."

"I should think that you might have been," said Ruth. Her tone was dry, but her eyes were glowing and her breath coming quickly. "And what then?"

"What was worth it?" asked Ruth, and dropped into a chair facing him.

"Why—everything that happened afterwards—and a whole lot that had happened before. We did some pretty good work out there. That is, Pembroke did—and I helped."

"Who is Pembroke?" Ruth asked. "You spoke of him downstairs as 'Lord Pembroke.' How did you get to know him?"

"Well, it was like this," said Ruggles; "after I left you that day, I went home and found a letter from the European general manager saying that the company had decided to give the management of the Vienna store to another man—a fellow named Lorenz, who had been in the shoe business in Vienna and knew the trade. Maybe he was a better man for the job than I was, but I felt awful sore about it, because I felt that the company had as good as promised it to me."

"I don't blame you," said Ruth, who, by certain subtle methods of her own, had sifted the affair quite to the bottom and knew almost as much about it as Ruggles himself. But she wanted to hear his version and, dropping her chin in her hand, she fixed her thoughtful sapphire eyes on his face and encouraged him to talk.

"Coming just as it did," said Ruggles, "made me sick, clear through. You see, it sort of put me in a bad light with people who thought that I was trying to bluff them about my real position with the company. So I made up my mind to quit the company then and there, but before I left, I wanted to tell that lying Durand, the manager of the Paris store, just what I thought of him, and I wanted to tell Lorenz, too. Both of them had pretended to be good friends of mine, and all the while they'd been working behind my back to do me out of the job. So I went into the store and told them. All I intended to do was just that. I had no more idea of starting anything than I had of having a fight with a light here in the office of this hotel. I thought too much of the company for that."

"Who began the row?" Ruth asked, never taking her eyes from Ruggles' face.

"Lorenz did. He couldn't stand for what I said to him and grabbed me by the arm and tried to throw me out. But suddenly I saw red, and when Durand and Wagner—and I don't know who else butted in, I guess I just ran amuck, and started to clean out the place. I don't seem to remember just what did happen. But there was a man in the store that I'd met that morning on the Avenue du Bois, and he got me out of the place and took me to the Madrid for lunch. Well, it turned out that he was Lord Pembroke, an English surgeon, on his way out to Turkey to work with the Red Cross. I managed to persuade him to take me on as his orderly—and I've been out there ever since."

"Are you his orderly still?" Ruth asked.

Ruggles smiled. "No," said he. "I might be, though, if it hadn't been for one of those things that can only happen in war, I guess. Pembroke had rigged up a field hospital, scarcely more than a dressing-station, out on the Tschataldscha lines, and we were hard at work there one night when the colonel in command, a fine old Turk named Hamid Pasha, sent word that he was just starting out to make his rounds and thought Pembroke might like to go with him. But Pembroke was mighty busy, so he sent me along to see if there were many wounded there. I had brought in a couple of our infantry made a bayonet charge and drove the Bulgarians back. I didn't know anything about that part of it, as I'd got a crack across the head with the butt of a rifle. The colonel was shot through the body, and I got my ankle smashed by a bullet and a bayonet stuck through my arm and one or two other wounds, and was all in."

"I should think that you might have been," said Ruth. Her tone was dry, but her eyes were glowing and her breath coming quickly. "And what then?"

"What was worth it?" asked Ruth, and dropped into a chair facing him.

"Why—everything that happened afterwards—and a whole lot that had happened before. We did some pretty good work out there. That is, Pembroke did—and I helped."

"Who is Pembroke?" Ruth asked. "You spoke of him downstairs as 'Lord Pembroke.' How did you get to know him?"

"Well, it was like this," said Ruggles; "after I left you that day, I went home and found a letter from the European general manager saying that the company had decided to give the management of the Vienna store to another man—a fellow named Lorenz, who had been in the shoe business in Vienna and knew the trade. Maybe he was a better man for the job than I was, but I felt awful sore about it, because I felt that the company had as good as promised it to me."

"I don't blame you," said Ruth, who, by certain subtle methods of her own, had sifted the affair quite to the bottom and knew almost as much about it as Ruggles himself. But she wanted to hear his version and, dropping her chin in her hand, she fixed her thoughtful sapphire eyes on his face and encouraged him to talk.

"Coming just as it did," said Ruggles, "made me sick, clear through. You see, it sort of put me in a bad light with people who thought that I was trying to bluff them about my real position with the company. So I made up my mind to quit the company then and there, but before I left, I wanted to tell that lying Durand, the manager of the Paris store, just what I thought of him, and I wanted to tell Lorenz, too. Both of them had pretended to be good friends of mine, and all the while they'd been working behind my back to do me out of the job. So I went into the store and told them. All I intended to do was just that. I had no more idea of starting anything than I had of having a fight with a light here in the office of this hotel. I thought too much of the company for that."

"Who began the row?" Ruth asked, never taking her eyes from Ruggles' face.

"Lorenz did. He couldn't stand for what I said to him and grabbed me by the arm and tried to throw me out. But suddenly I saw red, and when Durand and Wagner—and I don't know who else butted in, I guess I just ran amuck, and started to clean out the place. I don't seem to remember just what did happen. But there was a man in the store that I'd met that morning on the Avenue du Bois, and he got me out of the place and took me to the Madrid for lunch. Well, it turned out that he was Lord Pembroke, an English surgeon, on his way out to Turkey to work with the Red Cross. I managed to persuade him to take me on as his orderly—and I've been out there ever since."

"Are you his orderly still?" Ruth asked.

Ruggles smiled. "No," said he. "I might be, though, if it hadn't been for one of those things that can only happen in war, I guess. Pembroke had rigged up a field hospital, scarcely more than a dressing-station, out on the Tschataldscha lines, and we were hard at work there one night when the colonel in command, a fine old Turk named Hamid Pasha, sent word that he was just starting out to make his rounds and thought Pembroke might like to go with him. But Pembroke was mighty busy, so he sent me along to see if there were many wounded there. I had brought in a couple of our infantry made a bayonet charge and drove the Bulgarians back. I didn't know anything about that part of it, as I'd got a crack across the head with the butt of a rifle. The colonel was shot through the body, and I got my ankle smashed by a bullet and a bayonet stuck through my arm and one or two other wounds, and was all in."

"I should think that you might have been," said Ruth. Her tone was dry, but her eyes were glowing and her breath coming quickly. "And what then?"

City Markets and The Cost of Living

Cuts Down Cost of Handling and Eliminates Middlemen.

The operation of city produce markets is regarded as having a close bearing on the cost of living in the towns and cities. With a view evidently of bringing out the best systems of conducting city markets The Agricultural Gazette of Canada, published by the department of agriculture at Ottawa, has brought together, in the December number, the systems by which markets are handled in eighteen of the larger cities in Canada. The statements provided by city mayors, city clerks and superintendents of markets show clearly that there does not exist in Canada any uniform system of city market administration. Each city has its own special rules and regulations. In some instances the market is sublet to a sort of publican who buys from the city the privilege to collect tolls or fees from those who bring produce to the market. In other cases, as in Regina, we find a women's organization efficiently conducting the city market on a business basis, while many public markets are directly managed by a committee appointed by the city council. The Hamilton board of trade has established a wholesome relationship between its urban and rural peoples by creating a farmers' section of the board. The friendly co-operation and exchange of views between the two sections result in a better understanding of conditions, consequently, the Hamilton market is highly esteemed by growers and buyers. It serves the interest of both. Special features adopted by various market administrations are giving excellent results, for example, the system adopted as at Port Arthur for the selling of consignments of produce by the market manager on a commission basis. Besides securing to the purchasers fresh supplies of food at a cost, usually below the prices charged in the stores, these markets bring to the producer considerably higher prices than if the produce were compelled to pass through several hands each taking their necessary toll.

"What was worth it?" asked Ruth, and dropped into a chair facing him.

"Why—everything that happened afterwards—and a whole lot that had happened before. We did some pretty good work out there. That is, Pembroke did—and I helped."

"Who is Pembroke?" Ruth asked. "You spoke of him downstairs as 'Lord Pembroke.' How did you get to know him?"

"Well, it was like this," said Ruggles; "after I left you that day, I went home and found a letter from the European general manager saying that the company had decided to give the management of the Vienna store to another man—a fellow named Lorenz, who had been in the shoe business in Vienna and knew the trade. Maybe he was a better man for the job than I was, but I felt awful sore about it, because I felt that the company had as good as promised it to me."

"I don't blame you," said Ruth, who, by certain subtle methods of her own, had sifted the affair quite to the bottom and knew almost as much about it as Ruggles himself. But she wanted to hear his version and, dropping her chin in her hand, she fixed her thoughtful sapphire eyes on his face and encouraged him to talk.

"Coming just as it did," said Ruggles, "made me sick, clear through. You see, it sort of put me in a bad light with people who thought that I was trying to bluff them about my real position with the company. So I made up my mind to quit the company then and there, but before I left, I wanted to tell that lying Durand, the manager of the Paris store, just what I thought of him, and I wanted to tell Lorenz, too. Both of them had pretended to be good friends of mine, and all the while they'd been working behind my back to do me out of the job. So I went into the store and told them. All I intended to do was just that. I had no more idea of starting anything than I had of having a fight with a light here in the office of this hotel. I thought too much of the company for that."

"Who began the row?" Ruth asked, never taking her eyes from Ruggles' face.

"Lorenz did. He couldn't stand for what I said to him and grabbed me by the arm and tried to throw me out. But suddenly I saw red, and when Durand and Wagner—and I don't know who else butted in, I guess I just ran amuck, and started to clean out the place. I don't seem to remember just what did happen. But there was a man in the store that I'd met that morning on the Avenue du Bois, and he got me out of the place and took me to the Madrid for lunch. Well, it turned out that he was Lord Pembroke, an English surgeon, on his way out to Turkey to work with the Red Cross. I managed to persuade him to take me on as his orderly—and I've been out there ever since."

"Are you his orderly still?" Ruth asked.

Ruggles smiled. "No," said he. "I might be, though, if it hadn't been for one of those things that can only happen in war, I guess. Pembroke had rigged up a field hospital, scarcely more than a dressing-station, out on the Tschataldscha lines, and we were hard at work there one night when the colonel in command, a fine old Turk named Hamid Pasha, sent word that he was just starting out to make his rounds and thought Pembroke might like to go with him. But Pembroke was mighty busy, so he sent me along to see if there were many wounded there. I had brought in a couple of our infantry made a bayonet charge and drove the Bulgarians back. I didn't know anything about that part of it, as I'd got a crack across the head with the butt of a rifle. The colonel was shot through the body, and I got my ankle smashed by a bullet and a bayonet stuck through my arm and one or two other wounds, and was all in."

"I should think that you might have been," said Ruth. Her tone was dry, but her eyes were glowing and her breath coming quickly. "And what then?"

"What was worth it?" asked Ruth, and dropped into a chair facing him.

"Why—everything that happened afterwards—and a whole lot that had happened before. We did some pretty good work out there. That is, Pembroke did—and I helped."

"Who is Pembroke?" Ruth asked. "You spoke of him downstairs as 'Lord Pembroke.' How did you get to know him?"

"Well, it was like this," said Ruggles; "after I left you that day, I went home and found a letter from the European general manager saying that the company had decided to give the management of the Vienna store to another man—a fellow named Lorenz, who had been in the shoe business in Vienna and knew the trade. Maybe he was a better man for the job than I was, but I felt awful sore about it, because I felt that the company had as good as promised it to me."

"I don't blame you," said Ruth, who, by certain subtle methods of her own, had sifted the affair quite to the bottom and knew almost as much about it as Ruggles himself. But she wanted to hear his version and, dropping her chin in her hand, she fixed her thoughtful sapphire eyes on his face and encouraged him to talk.

"Coming just as it did," said Ruggles, "made me sick, clear through. You see, it sort of put me in a bad light with people who thought that I was trying to bluff them about my real position with the company. So I made up my mind to quit the company then and there, but before I left, I wanted to tell that lying Durand, the manager of the Paris store, just what I thought of him, and I wanted to tell Lorenz, too. Both of them had pretended to be good friends of mine, and all the while they'd been working behind my back to do me out of the job. So I went into the store and told them. All I intended to do was just that. I had no more idea of starting anything than I had of having a fight with a light here in the office of this hotel. I thought too much of the company for that."

"Who began the row?" Ruth asked, never taking her eyes from Ruggles' face.

"Lorenz did. He couldn't stand for what I said to him and grabbed me by the arm and tried to throw me out. But suddenly I saw red, and when Durand and Wagner—and I don't know who else butted in, I guess I just ran amuck, and started to clean out the place. I don't seem to remember just what did happen. But there was a man in the store that I'd met that morning on the Avenue du Bois, and he got me out of the place and took me to the Madrid for lunch. Well, it turned out that he was Lord Pembroke, an English surgeon, on his way out to Turkey to work with the Red Cross. I managed to persuade him to take me on as his orderly—and I've been out there ever since."

"Are you his orderly still?" Ruth asked.

Ruggles smiled. "No," said he. "I might be, though, if it hadn't been for one of those things that can only happen in war, I guess. Pembroke had rigged up a field hospital, scarcely more than a dressing-station, out on the Tschataldscha lines, and we were hard at work there one night when the colonel in command, a fine old Turk named Hamid Pasha, sent word that he was just starting out to make his rounds and thought Pembroke might like to go with him. But Pembroke was mighty busy, so he sent me along to see if there were many wounded there. I had brought in a couple of our infantry made a bayonet charge and drove the Bulgarians back. I didn't know anything about that part of it, as I'd got a crack across the head with the butt of a rifle. The colonel was shot through the body, and I got my ankle smashed by a bullet and a bayonet stuck through my arm and one or two other wounds, and was all in."

"I should think that you might have been," said Ruth. Her tone was dry, but her eyes were glowing and her breath coming quickly. "And what then?"

"What was worth it?" asked Ruth, and dropped into a chair facing him.

"Why—everything that happened afterwards—and a whole lot that had happened before. We did some pretty good work out there. That is, Pembroke did—and I helped."

"Who is Pembroke?" Ruth asked. "You spoke of him downstairs as 'Lord Pembroke.' How did you get to know him?"

"Well, it was like this," said Ruggles; "after I left you that day, I went home and found a letter from the European general manager saying that the company had decided to give the management of the Vienna store to another man—a fellow named Lorenz, who had been in the shoe business in Vienna and knew the trade. Maybe he was a better man for the job than I was, but I felt awful sore about it, because I felt that the company had as good as promised it to me."

"I don't blame you," said Ruth, who, by certain subtle methods of her own, had sifted the affair quite to the bottom and knew almost as much about it as Ruggles himself. But she wanted to hear his version and, dropping her chin in her hand, she fixed her thoughtful sapphire eyes on his face and encouraged him to talk.

"Coming just as it did," said Ruggles, "made me sick, clear through. You see, it sort of put me in a bad light with people who thought that I was trying to bluff them about my real position with the company. So I made up my mind to quit the company then and there, but before I left, I wanted to tell that lying Durand, the manager of the Paris store, just what I thought of him, and I wanted to tell Lorenz, too. Both of them had pretended to be good friends of mine, and all the while they'd been working behind my back to do me out of the job. So I went into the store and told them. All I intended to do was just that. I had no more idea of starting anything than I had of having a fight with a light here in the office of this hotel. I thought too much of the company for that."

"Who began the row?" Ruth asked, never taking her eyes from Ruggles' face.

"Lorenz did. He couldn't stand for what I said to him and grabbed me by the arm and tried to throw me out. But suddenly I saw red, and when Durand and Wagner—and I don't know who else butted in, I guess I just ran amuck, and started to clean out the place. I don't seem to remember just what did happen. But there was a man in the store that I'd met that morning on the Avenue du Bois, and he got me out of the place and took me to the Madrid for lunch. Well, it turned out that he was Lord Pembroke, an English surgeon, on his way out to Turkey to work with the Red Cross. I managed to persuade him to take me on as his orderly—and I've been out there ever since."

"Are you his orderly still?" Ruth asked.

Ruggles smiled. "No," said he. "I might be, though, if it hadn't been for one of those things that can only happen in war, I guess. Pembroke had rigged up a field hospital, scarcely more than a dressing-station, out on the Tschataldscha lines, and we were hard at work there one night when the colonel in command, a fine old Turk named Hamid Pasha, sent word that he was just starting out to make his rounds and thought Pembroke might like to go with him. But Pembroke was mighty busy, so he sent me along to see if there were many wounded there. I had brought in a couple of our infantry made a bayonet charge and drove the Bulgarians back. I didn't know anything about that part of it, as I'd got a crack across the head with the butt of a rifle. The colonel was shot through the body, and I got my ankle smashed by a bullet and a bayonet stuck through my arm and one or two other wounds, and was all in."

Numerous Incorporations In British Columbia

During the Year no Fewer Than 614 New Incorporations Have Been Registered

Figures Tabulated by the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies for the Province of British Columbia disclose the fact that during the year which has just passed no fewer than 614 new incorporations have been registered.

This number constitutes the largest number in any one year since 1912. The figures also show a very large increase over the business of 1918, when the number of new concerns incorporated did not exceed 347.

December, 1919, also constitutes a record in that the total of incorporations is the largest registered in any one month since March, 1913. Sixty-nine incorporations were registered during this month.

In the matter of registration fees collected for the present year the amount is approximately $70,000, the largest since the year 1913, or $14,000 in excess of the amount collected last year.

"What was worth it?" asked Ruth, and dropped into a chair facing him.

"Why—everything that happened afterwards—and a whole lot that had happened before. We did some pretty good work out there. That is, Pembroke did—and I helped."

"Who is Pembroke?" Ruth asked. "You spoke of him downstairs as 'Lord Pembroke.' How did you get to know him?"

"Well, it was like this," said Ruggles; "after I left you that day, I went home and found a letter from the European general manager saying that the company had decided to give the management of the Vienna store to another man—a fellow named Lorenz, who had been in the shoe business in Vienna and knew the trade. Maybe he was a better man for the job than I was, but I felt awful sore about it, because I felt that the company had as good as promised it to me."

"I don't blame you," said Ruth, who, by certain subtle methods of her own, had sifted the affair quite to the bottom and knew almost as much about it as Ruggles himself. But she wanted to hear his version and, dropping her chin in her hand, she fixed her thoughtful sapphire eyes on his face and encouraged him to talk.

"Coming just as it did," said Ruggles, "made me sick, clear through. You see, it

